

From the Classroom to the Community: Making Change Happen

Last year, fifth grade students at McCarver Elementary School responded to the murder of a classmate, Zina Linnik, by collaborating with community partners to redesign and renovate two public parks. A panel of these young community activists will speak about the motivations and challenges that have shaped their work.

McCarver Park drawing

March 22, 2010 • 6–7 p.m. • Trimble Forum • Free and open to the public

UNIVERSITY of
PUGET SOUND

Est. 1888

For more information contact Monica DeHart at mdehart@pugetsound.edu, or Amy Ryken aryken@pugetsound.edu. To learn more about the Zina Linnik project, visit www.metroparksfoundation.org/zina-linnik-project.

Co-sponsored by Civic Scholarship Initiative, Comparative Sociology, School of Education, and Environmental Policy and Decision Making